Engagement cups belong to the latest fads. Thus, whenever a young lady allows her friends to know she is about to be married these friends must straightway send her a cup and saucer, and they must be of royal ware, too. Ayoung lady, who is very well known, has received 180. What she can do with so many is a question of conanderable seriousness to her. She cannot begin to use them. There is the trouble, too, of stowing them in some convenient place, so the instant a caller is announced, in case the caller has sent a cup, it can be among the particular ones exposed. This makes the fiance wish she had no friends, or else engagement cups were not so fashionable. Not every young woman is so unfortunate, and those who receive a few cups and saucers have no difficulty in keeping the dainty little tea-table in the drawing or reception-room decorated with all that have been given. The question of engagement gifts might become very embarrassing, especially if the engagement should be broken. Then it would be, shall all of these cups be returned? Ex-engaged young women return their lover's gifts as a rule, why should they not return the friends' gifts, which were given because of their engagement. Of course, all young ladies believe their especial lover will be faithful, but lovers sometimes fail to come to time, even after their brides are ready for the marriage and the guests are assembled to witness it, as was related of a New York couple only last week. The fad is as foolish as many another is, but Indianapolis is particularly free from any of the extremes so often described in letters from New York and other sitters. and other cities.
